The public will then be forced to take what they need, not what they are willing to accept; colleges will be encouraged to produce but proper men; dentists compelled to obtain a complete knowledge of their profession alone; and the bone of contention removed forever from physicians. Another legal error needs correcting. The law has declared dentistry to be an independent profession by sanctioning a peculiar and-separate degree--D. D.S.to be conferred upon those supposed to be fitted for practice. At a subsequent time the law has confirmed her previous opiryon, in permitting the enactment of laws to regulate the practice of dentistry. But, no provision has been made by which, in cases terminating fatally while under the care of a thus legally qualified dentist, he may be enabled to close his connection with the case with dignity and safety to himself and to his profession. The law which causes him to qualify if satisfied in what she considers as qualification, should not fail to perfectly protect him. Legally qualified dentists should be enabled to deal with their cases eventuating in death (rare though they may be) with the same dignity and safety as can the physician deal with his. As it is now, a death thus occurring is a case for the coroner, with physicians testimony accepted on dental practice, and an opportunity offered for slander, opprobrium, and reproach to be unjustly heaped upon the innocent, and upon a...
