Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: . . . what has already begun and what, God grant, may soon be consummated: the passing of the reflex. When to the nerve specialist comes a case of epilepsy with a note from the family physician saying that the ovaries have been removed without effect and so perhaps the trouble is in the brain, or a case of convulsive tic with the message that spasm has continued in spite of cauterization of the turbinates, or, as occurred to me a few days ago, he sees a born neuropath with typical traumatic neurosis who has undergone live pelvic operations for relief of her nervous symptoms, he groans in spirit and looks longingly forward to the millenium when the man who operates shall have or procure an adequate understanding of that for which he cuts. In the meantime, under the keen edge and rigid requirements of neurology the so-called reflex as a cause of grave nervous disorder is gradually being pushed into its rightful place: that is. among the relatively unimportant curiosities of etiology. Venetian Building. RESPONSE TO THE TOAST, THE BABIES. At a Banquet given at St. Louis, Saturday Evening, April 30, 1898, to the General Passenger Agents of the Southern and Western Railroads. By Dr. I. N. Love, St. Louis. TAr. Toastmaster, (I had almost said Roastmaster): No subject could have been presented to me which in itself would have furnished greater inspiration to me to talk. Surely no topic could more appropriately follow the. last one presented,...
