It is difficult to understand how in so rigorous a climate they can be considered habitable. However, the Sisters and children seemed to be contented and happy, and all have exceptionally good health. In view of the good work that is being done and of the apparent need of the mission, I wrote to Mother Katharine M. Drexel1 begging her to make an extra allowance for this mission such as would enable the good missionary to complete the buildings; this she readily agreed to do and has several times written him concerning the matter, but he sedulously ignores her letters and consequently, up to the present time, has not received the proffered donation. It should be remarked here that Father Thomas action in this matter is inspired solely by conscientious motives. He says that Mother Katharine is overburdened with requests of the kind, that he is getting the same results from the children that other schools materially well equipped are getting, that everyone is comfortable and happy, and consequently that he sees no need of requiring help from any source so long as he can get along and accomplish his work without it. While it must be admitted that Father Thomas seems to take an extreme view of this matter, he is more than half right; would to Cod the same...
