Credit rests ultimately upon the fact that many persons possess wealth who have no present use for it, and are willing that it should be employed by those who can and will make use of it. This explanation of credit will serve to indicate the important functions which banks play in the world of business. They are reservoirs of credit. In them are gathered claims upon the unemployed wealth of the country, and through them the wealth is directed by loans into 1 channels of usefulness. Man is no more than a highly developed animal, yet there is a wide difference between man and other animals. He is the only animal whose desires increase as they are nourished; the only animal who is never satisfied. The want of every other living thing is fixed and uniform. The horse of to-day aspires to no more than the horse when man first (mounted him. The eagle of to-day who poises himself in mid air desires no better food and lodging than did the eagle who first preyed on the nimble flock which used to roam the undiscovered expanse. But not so with man. No sooner are his animal wants satisfied, new wants arise. Man wants food first--so does the beast; shelter next; and these given, his reproductive instincts assert their sway; so does the beast. However, the beast goes no farther, and the man parts company with him. Man has but set his feet on the...
