Not illustrated. 1820 Excerpt: . . . the people are not habitually free from civil and ecclesiastical tyrants that they are disposed to exercise tyranny themselves. Habitual freedom produces effects directly the reverse in every particular. For a proof of this, look into America, or if that be too much trouble, look into human nature with the eyes of common sense. --Joel Barlow. (c) Whether a representation shall sit one, two, or three, or more years, it is left to the business of the electors to determine; for those who have power to delegate, must possess also the power of delegating it for what period of time they choose, as far as it may affect themselves. It is a matter of opinion, which ought to be regulated by the principle, that as all delegated power may be abused, the shortest period prescribed by general convenience is the best adapted for general security. --Wooler. (i) If universal suffrage and annual parliaments were secured to the people in such terms as to set all subterfuge at defiance, whatever corruptions may happen to creep into any department of government would be removed as fast as the evil made its appearance; because then the interest of the representatives and the interest of the people would be one; and the elections being frequent, and the number of electors great, corruption could not be practised, nor artifices found out, by which those two interests could be put in opposition to each other. --T. Aetona. (c) It is certain, that all parts of...
